Communication is central to HURA. Our mission statement includes clear language as to the scope and purpose of keeping our members engaged and informed through “foster(ing) social interaction among members, serve(ing) as a liaison with the University representing the concerns and issues of HURA members, and disseminating information that is of interest and value to members via printed and electronic media.”

To that end, over the years we have developed a variety of communications tools. The role of each is somewhat different, but they are very much related.
- Newsletter (print and electronic)
- Website
- Facebook Page
- E-List (for news notes, timely information, event reminders, etc.)
- Separate program flyers (print and electronic)

We also issue occasional or targeted publications such as Harvard Resources for Retirees and a new-retiree brochure. Currently each format is managed independently, and there are no guidelines that relate to an overall strategy. Fortunately, the Board members and volunteers in charge of the various publications exercise excellent judgment about what to include. Nonetheless, there is significant overlap, which is advantageous. For example, anything that we put in print can also be disseminated via Facebook, our website, or sent to the E-list. Our question is as much about what is appropriate for each form of communication as for all of them. The capacity of each format influences how we use them. But are the audiences different? What about other emerging social media and communication tools? Which formats do our members prefer?

HURA Reviews Its Communications

HURA has grown over the years with a diverse membership of nearly 1,400. We represent Harvard retirees from every corner of the University, and every job classification from academic and instructional through support systems and services. Some of our members (recent retirees, for example), may be more comfortable with and prefer using social or electronic media as their primary information source. Others prefer print.

The HURA Board has formed a committee to look into these issues. It has begun a process of fact finding, soliciting input from members, and reviewing best practices used by other similar organizations. The committee’s work will result in recommendations for HURA’s various publications and for managing the transition to greater reliance upon electronic communications. However, there is no expectation that print communications will be discontinued.

We will create a member survey so that all will have a chance to comment and tell us about their preferences. Before that you are invited to share your thoughts and recommendations by sending them to John Collins, chair of the committee, at johnwcollinsiii@gmail.com.

In Brief

Balance Billing from Medicare

Monthly Medicare Summary

Notices that you receive for Part B (Medical Insurance) tell you the Amount Provider Charged, Medicare Approved Amount, Amount Medicare Paid, and the Maximum You May Be Billed. But you never receive a bill for this amount—this “balance”. Why?

“Balance billing” refers to the practice of charging patients for the difference between a health care provider’s fee for medical services and their health insurance’s allowed fee amount. When balance billing is allowed, the patient is financially responsible for the balance of the bill. This is true for people who don’t have Medicare. Medicare’s current rules limit balance billing and provide important financial protection for consumers by limiting how much physicians and other health professionals can charge their Medicare patients.

About 95 percent of physicians are “participating providers,” which means they agree to accept Medicare’s approved payment amounts as full payment for the Medicare-covered services they provide for all Medicare patients they see. Patients may be billed for any Medicare cost sharing (such as deductibles, copayments, and insurance) that applies, but cannot be balance-billed for additional charges. If the patient has supplemental private insurance, it may even cover some or all of the cost sharing.

Social Security COLA for 2019

Social Security benefits will increase by 2.8% in 2019. That is the largest cost-of-living adjustment since 2012. If your Medicare premiums are paid directly from Social Security benefits, your new benefit amount was announced in the 2019 Medicare premiums letter that was sent in December.

Most Social Security beneficiaries will be able to see their COLA notice and other personal information online through their mySocialSecurity account, which they can sign up for at https://www.ssa.gov/myaccount.
